Experimental films
Local curtains usually down

Graham Weinbren

There are experimental filmmakers in Los Angeles, although it is hard to hear them loudly in the raucous studio. There is a rich community of Southern California artists who make films, and a distinctive style of independent cinema is emerging in this area. L.A. filmmakers frequently receive international recognition. Screenwriter was the major prize at the Ann Arbor film festival this year, and the year before as well. However, few residents of L.A. know of the location of the local non-commercial filmmakers.

Graham Weinbren is an experimental film buff who has been influenced by his passion for cinema and his skill in documenting his work. His films have won numerous awards, and he has been featured in numerous film festivals. His work explores the complexities of the human experience and the social issues that shape our lives.

Chasing the Chief
The plot thickens

"All the President's Men" is a movie that we have seen many times. Although this time the bad guy wears a sweaty upper lip and the good guys put him in the spotlight, the word is the same. Except this time the good guy is not just one but two. William Goldman's adaptation of the book is not just the one

The presence of Hoffman and Redford — backed up by Jason Robards, Martin Balsam, and Jack Warden — will draw yet another segment of the film-going public to the theatre, the star-gazers who will pay $3.50 to see them in anything. On the face of it, that's a good thing, because it means that people will have a chance to witness the performances of the great actors who have given us "All the President's Men." However, there are some who say that the movie is predictable and formulaic.

But beyond the most superficial attributes of the film is something that is more tricky and thorough: the way in which the main characters' motivations and actions are well-developed. This is particularly true of the character of the President. While the character of the President is not idealized, there are many who say that he is not idealized. This is one of the reasons why the movie has been so successful. It is a story about the way in which the President and his advisors have tried to manipulate the public and the media to their advantage.

Sartan’s poems

Ben Pleasants

Fifty years of excellence

The reader will find in the poems of May Sarton an expressiveness of language and rhyme equalled only in recent times by Auden and Yeats. M. Sarton’s poems are elegantly crafted, and there is a truly individual voice in her work.

There are the peaceful days we never knew.

Here are the leaves. Here are the silent trees.

And you are reading

poems while I sing.

The hours are long.

There is no need of words

The lines are strict and tight.

There is in all her work a persistent voice of the excellence of Elsie and Yeats as though she had held them up to emulate, not imitate. Never a copier, her art is of a high order, to be taken up, down and taken up again by the reader who loves the house and ideas as expressed
